The Responsibility of the Clergy in the Reconstruction of the Crippled Soldier

WE must count on the return from the front of thousands of crippled soldiers. We must plan to give them the best possible chance for the future.

The government will provide the best of surgical care and special training for self-support. But whether this really puts the disabled man back on his feet in the community depends on whether the attitude of the public operates as a help or hindrance.

The American Red Cross desires to enlist the assistance of the clergy of the United States—in their joint rôles of personal advisers and leaders of community opinion—in promoting sound doctrine on these four points:

1. To convince the public that the cripple is not helpless but capable of being restored to complete independence if trained and placed in the right line of work.
2. That it is no kindness to encourage the cripple to idleness; that on the contrary every influence should be brought to bear to have him accept training and prepare for useful employment.
3. That the duty of the community is intelligently to employ him, rather than to expend equivalent energy in social entertainment or in the expression of unwise sympathy which tends more to demoralize than to build up character.

4. To make known to the public in general, and to the families of soldiers in particular, the remarkable results in the reconstruction of crippled men being attained by modern methods of medical and social science. The greatest terror in war has been the prospect of returning home disabled. It is no more than fair that mothers should know how little the loss of a limb means now to the man who is himself determined to succeed.

Beginning June 1, 1918, the American Red Cross will inaugurate an educational campaign to create public sentiment helpful to the cripple. It would be especially appreciated if you could further this effort by speaking to your congregation during the first weeks in June on their responsibilities to our disabled soldiers.

If you are willing to help in this way and will notify us by letter or post card we will send you, just prior to that date, current data on the latest developments in the field of human reconstruction.

Your enlistment in the cause is an essential link in the chain of restoring the crippled soldier to useful employment which will make him, in truth, no longer handicapped.
